

Rhode Island Commission for Health Advocacy and Equity

2024 Addendum to 2022 Brief:

Impacts of the COVID-19 Pandemic on Food Security in Rhode Island Communities

The purpose of the Commission for Health Advocacy and Equity (CHAE) is to serve as Rhode Island's statewide body for monitoring health disparities and promoting strategies advancing health equity.

In 2022, the CHAE published a brief to highlight how Rhode Islanders were affected by the COVID-19 pandemic, focusing specifically on food security and the State's response to food access challenges.

This addendum updates the brief to the most current data and information, while also utilizing the same reference sources, as the 2022 brief reflected a point in time analysis.

Percentage of Population Food Insecure Over Time¹

The brief and addendum use Rhode Island statewide food insecurity measure data from Feeding America. Additional information related to Rhode Island food insecurity can be found through the Rhode Island Community Food Bank² which utilizes findings from the RI Life Index.³ The CHAE recommends using these data to guide actions that will advance health equity and address inequitable health outcomes.
